
Pennsylvania Supreme Court Eliminates Future Credit for Medical Benefits in Workers' Compensation Third Party Settlements

The recent Pennsylvania Supreme Court decision of Whitmoyer v. WCAB (Mountain Country Meats) directly affects workers' compensation insurers seeking to reduce their future liabilities by utilizing a time-honored practice of taking a future credit against medical benefits. There are, however, still ways an insurer can limit its future exposure through subrogation.

In Whitmoyer, the Supreme Court held that an insurer's right to a future credit on workers' compensation payments after the settlement of a third party case applies only to indemnity payments, not medical benefits.
